

Overview

The Community Developmental Disability Organization (CDDO) assists developmentally disabled consumers located in the Sedgwick County area to improve their quality of life by accessing community services that often averts their entry into the State of Kansas' two developmentally disabled institutions and allows for an independent lifestyle. The CDDO is one of twenty-eight developmental disability organizations spread across the state of Kansas that assists developmentally disabled consumers with common functions, such as homecare, medical services, employment, and housing. Since passage of the Developmental Disabilities Reform Act in 1995 by the Kansas Legislature, community services for developmentally disabled consumers have continued to grow as consumers become more integrated into the local community through employment, friends, and family.

The CDDO manages a network of private service providers who assist roughly 1,200 individuals and families affected by a developmental disability to achieve their goals. This management responsibility includes determining individual eligibility for service funding, assisting in the selection of providers, approving and reviewing requests for placement of individuals in institutional settings, and establishing affiliation agreements.

The CDDO is funded through a collection of County general revenues and state reimbursements. County funding is utilized to provide service to consumers through social service organizations based in the community. Reimbursements to the CDDO are made through the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services as services are provided to consumers referred to the CDDO.
